Y, Hiêu and Nguyễn, Vương An. "Next of Kiln." The Architectural Review. (September 2024). p.67-75.

"Narrow gaps in the new workshop's perforated brick walls offer glimpses into the production space, so that visitors can observe the artisans at work. The architects explain that the height of these gaps is designed to accommodate the movement and posture of the terracotta workers. All of their tools- moulds, clay, potters' wheels and unbaked artworks- are laid on the rammed earth floor, and the artisans sit on low chairs or stools to work." (69).
